pleasantly chats with its readers: Thirty years!-is not that a long time?-Venerable sir (whose eyes are now so benevolently fixed upon us,) how long is it we beg, that you have known us through your glasses? Ah, you shake your head and think of funerals that have made them dim with other mists than those of Time, and are silent. Gentle madam, how many years is it since it was our pleasure to whisper to the world, under the scarcely-seen but always-lookedfor "Married heading, that one more man had passed, plural, into Paradise, and no one deemed it singular, knowing your grace and beauty! (He touches his smoking coffee coaxingly with his spoon while reading this and smiles across the table, and murmurs, "Mrs. Smith, how long is it, my dear?") "Twenty-five years," your thoughtful answer is to us and "John" together. "So long-so long -so long?" And yet, Mrs. Smith, your face has not lost the freshness of young womanhood, and seems to keep "youth at the prow and pleasure at the helm" of every day still. Esteemed young friend (whose voice was so eloquent for ours and us in the late campaign) how many summers have the political butterflies fluttered since first, a boy on the first steps of aspirant thoughts, you read the Journal's column? "Fifteen," you auswer, "So long-so long indeed." Dear lady (we know your sweet school-girl face so well when our carriers met you on their morning rounds,) you remember when at sweet sixteen you found our Weekly on your father's table and read Amelia's poems to the dance of a dream and the flutter of a love in your bosom? And how long ago was that? ..___," you answer with an arch smile .-"So long, so long," We feel that NEW GOODS, FRESH GOODS, and CHEAP and Cotton Osnaburgs, Bed Comforts, Striped we are growing old, for you look thirty-

FOREIGN ITEMS.

In England, we see, the election of Mr. Lincoln, as President, was looked upon as a foregone conclusion, at the departure of the Arabia; and the journals, most of which are under the influence of strong anti-slavery instincts, were giving free expression to their happiness, at the result. Their commentaries, however, are, in the main, but a reflexion of the spirit which animates the Republican journals on this side. .

It was rumored in Paris at the last dates, that Persigny, has demanded to be recalled from London, and that he and the Emperor have had a misunderstanding in relation to public affairs. This taken in connection with the meeting of crowned heads at Warsaw, gains, at No. 64, King-street. was creating no little excitement in the Court circle.

The Turin correspondent of the London 'Times' thus discribes Prince Humbert, the heir to the throne of Italy: "Prince Humbert, a youth now in his seventeenth yeara bold and elegant rider, a first-rate marksman with the rifle, exhibiting skill and endurance in all manly exercises, endowed with a fair open countenance, in which the soldier-like honest mien of the father is blended with the delicate features and sweet expression of the mother, distinguished by affable manners and a graceful address-wins golden opinions with the multitude.

A foreign journal notices an ingenious contrivance for keeping crows from the cornfield, in operation on a neighboring farm. It is a self-acting gun, which being loaded in the morning continues to shoot at certain intervals during the day. It is so made that it can be set to discharge itself once in ten or ties, all of whom we will dispose of on the best fifteen minutes, or half an hour, or longer as | terms.
